Full details about the course are available from www.classics.cam.ac.uk/prospective/undergraduate and

www.undergraduate.study.cam.ac.uk/courses/classics

The Subject at Selwyn

Classics has always had a key part to play amongst the Arts subjects at Selwyn (even the inscription over the College gatehouse is in Greek!).

Although numbers taking the subject in any one year are not large, this means that Classics undergraduates are normally taught in small groups.

Classists at Selwyn are entirely free to choose whichever optional papers appeal to them. Emphasis is placed on securing the services of the best teaching for each paper.

The College Library is well stocked with books needed for Classics courses. Selwyn is the nearest mixed college to the Classical Faculty (literally a two-minute walk from the back gate), which houses a comprehensive library and is also where lectures and seminars take place.

Teaching in Classics

The current Director of Studies in Classics is Dr Rupert Thompson who specialises in classical philology and linguistics. Another Fellow of Selwyn is Dr Sophia Connell, a specialist on Aristotle who teaches ancient philosophy and ancient science. Dr Connell has been awarded the prestigious Pilkington Teaching Prize 2016.

Qualities we are looking for Those intending to read Classics at University tend by the nature of things to be committed to their subject. We want to recruit Classics undergraduates who have been intrigued by what they have so far discovered about the ancient world and want to find out more. Classics at Cambridge is a tough course: a candidate for Part I may end up taking nine papers, calling for a wide range of skills (translation, literary criticism, essay-writing). We select candidates who combine intellectual stamina and curiosity. The course caters for applicants with all levels of Greek and/or Latin - and for those with no previous experience of the classical languages.

Subject Requirements

If you are studying Ancient Greek to A-level (or equivalent) but not Latin, you must apply for the four-year course as it is easier to maintain your Greek whilst learning Latin, than to add intensive Latin to the very demanding first year of the three-year Classics course. In exceptional circumstances we may consider applicants for the three-year course who have not taken A-level Latin, but we would wish to discuss particular circumstances before agreeing to do so.

Interviews

Applicants receive three interviews, two of which are with subject specialists in Classics. We will be interested to discuss with you any pieces of classical literature you may have read or other engagement with the classical world. If you have experience in one or the other language, you may be asked to translate some Latin or Greek as part of the interview process.

You will also have a shorter general interview. This is intended to let us find out more about your motivation in applying for Classics at Cambridge. It is intended to give us a fuller sense of your aptitude for your chosen course, the maturity of your approach towards academic work, and your classical and other interests.

In addition, Cambridge University has a policy of giving all Classics applicants a further interview at a second College. This is intended to ensure that the standard of admission is as comparable as possible between the various Colleges.

Written Work

Candidates are asked to send in advance two pieces of recent marked and relevant class-work. They may be used as the basis for discussion in part of the subject interview.

Admissions Assessment

As at other colleges, applicants will be asked to complete a University-wide written aptitude assessment in Cambridge as part of the selection process.

Applicants for the four-year course will be asked to take part in a linguistic aptitude assessment exercise organised by the Faculty of Classics. For applicants who have no qualification at all in Latin or Greek, this does not presuppose any prior knowledge of any particular language. Applicants who have, for example, a GCSE in Latin or Greek might be set questions on that language. The test comprises a written component and a face-to-face feedback session, and may require staying overnight in College.

Finding out more and Open Days

The Faculty of Classics will be participating in the Cambridge Open Days on 6 and 7 July 2017. See the insert in our prospectus about this and other open days at Selwyn. Full details are also available on our website.